

New Postdoctoral Fellow position opening up at CSIRO, Canberra, Australia

Melania Figueroa

A Postdoctoral Fellow position will open shortly at CSIRO in Canberra, Australia to work with Dr. Melania Figueroa in preventing oat production losses due oat crown rust. The postdoctoral fellow will required a strong background in genetics and molecular biology and experience with pre-breeding research including development or implementation of genotyping techniques, molecular gene markers and assessment of gene expression. The position includes some relocation funding and would like for the postdoc to start in August or September 2022.

This is a great opportunity to join a large multidisciplinary team conducting research at the leading edge of the field of plant-pathogen interactions and with a strong record of high impact publications.
